young people who are participating. What's the next thing? Persons who are 19 years old or older may serve and sell alcoholic liquor in the course of their employment. What is their employment? What is their employment? Well, they are working for a person who purveys alcoholic liquor. It doesn't say the employment has to be in an establishment which is operating legally. Now, they might get the moonshiner, but the person who is 19 years old or older, in the course of his or her employment, can sell the liquor there with impunity because this statute gives that blanket coverage. Let's not make it a moonshiner though. I don't know if Hooters sells liquor. I wouldn't even go to a place with a name like that and, from the pictures I've seen, I wouldn't eat food in a place like that if I was there--people walking around with almost no clothes on. I am concerned about cleanliness and hygiene, especially when it comes to food, and these people are going to be rushing around somewhere, roller-skate, sweating? And then go give me some food to eat? If you have sweat coming off you, it's almost automatic to wipe your face, get it out of your eyes. So let's not take Hooters because I don't know if they sell liquor there. One of these restaurants where hoity-toity big-shot people go, the best of society, who want to be sure that our young people, meaning anybody below the age of 21, will not only not consume liquor, will not attempt to procure it, but will not even be standing near a display of liquor in a grocery store or any place else with signs that a cop thinks indicates that person has consumed liquor. We will say this person who, under all the circumstances I've mentioned, can be arrested and charged with a crime and deprived of the right to drive, can nevertheless work selling this devil's brew to others. Why in the world are we going to tell our young people this is such a terrible thing, they should not even have it in their possession, yet they can sell it? That's the philosophy of Terry Carpenter, they always say, about the dear departed blessing...blessing on his soul, wherever he may be. And if they are conscious wherever they are after they leave here and he's watching this, he's saying, go on, Chambers, go on; I couldn't do better myself. Terry and I got along very well. He was a very old white gentleman. I came here as a very young black gentleman and we hit it off immediately. Maybe opposites attract. He was sharp; I was sharp, and continue to be because I'm still breathing. Terry
